Introduction

Regina Akers grew up with the Mexican population in Los Angeles and the Sacramento Valley, and married into this culture at a young age. Over the years, she was exposed to the finest Mexican foods around, and became an excellent Mexican cook. She opened Regina's Mexican Cuisine in downtown Woodburn, Oregon in 1977.

In June of 1981, she taught a four-part cooking class at a Portland-area shopping mall, where she demonstrated her techniques and provided copies of the recipes. Herb Weiner, who had eaten at her Restaurant, was one of her original students. Herb realized that the four-week class barely skimmed the surface of Regina's cooking talents, and urged her to begin an ongoing series of cooking classes for the more serious students.

Since then, the class has met once a month at her Woodburn restaurant, on a night that the restaurant was closed. These classes were much less formal; the students actually prepared the dishes, and no prepared handouts were available. Herb, who seemed to have a special talent for sorting out the chaos of a dozen student cooks at work, assumed the role of note-taker. He then used a computer terminal to prepare copies of the recipes for each of the students. This cookbook is based on the recipes from the class.

Herb feels that most cookbooks are difficult to use, because the instructions require that the cook refer back to the list of ingredients. This cookbook is much easier to use, because the ingredients are listed to the left of the instructions that use them.

The title of the book, Beyond Tacos, was chosen because the recipes provide an insight into Mexican cuisine that most people never realize. Not only will this book show you how to cook delicious Mexican food at home, but it will also increase your appreciation of Mexican cuisine when you dine out. In order to enhance the value of this book as a reference volume, we have combined a comprehensive index and glossary into a single section at the back of the book. In this section you will find definitions of dishes and Spanish terms, and substitution instructions for unusual ingredients, together with relevant page numbers.

The design on the cover appeared on the sign and the menus for Regina's Mexican Cuisine in Woodburn.

This book was produced using Adobe InDesign on a Macintosh computer with Recipe Design Wizard software (<https://www.recipedesignwizard.com>). Recipe Design Wizard is a free Plug-in for InDesign available from the Adobe Exchange (<https://exchange.adobe.com/apps/cc/674>). Type was set using Baskerville MT Pro.

When Herb spoke with Regina and indicated he wanted to make Beyond Tacos available online, Regina loved the idea. We have both been working to incorporate many improvements into this new, revised edition.

Basic Spanish Spelling and Pronunciation

The Spanish alphabet is slightly different from the English alphabet. “K” and “W” are not used in Spanish, and appear only in words and proper names taken from other languages. The Spanish alphabet contains three additional letters:

- “ñ” (follows “n”), pronounced as “ny” as in “canyon.” For example, jalapeño, buñuelo.
- “ch” (a single letter following “c” in the Spanish alphabet). Chile is a four letter word in Spanish. Another example is chimichanga.
- “ll” (a single letter following “l” in the Spanish alphabet), pronounced as “y” (pollo, Spanish for chicken, is pronounced “poyo”). Another example is relleno (stuffed or stuffing).

Since the index contains a mixture of both English and Spanish, it is sorted according to the English alphabet.

Spanish pronunciation does not follow English rules:

- “j” is pronounced like “h,” thus jalapeño (a chile) is pronounced halapenyo (remember that “ñ” is pronounced like “ny”).
- “g” is pronounced like “h” whenever it is followed by “e” or “i,” as in gelatina (gelatine), gigante (giant or gigantic), and ginebra (gin).
- “rr” is rolled, rather than being pronounced like a single “r,” as in arroz or burrito.

Accentuation rules in Spanish are quite rigid. Unless the accent is explicitly shown, words which end in a vowel, “n,” or “s” have the accent placed on the second to last syllable. Words ending with a letter other than a vowel, “n,” or “s” have the accent placed on the last syllable. Words which violate this rule contain an explicit accent, for example albóndigas (meatballs).

Spanish adjectives must match the number (singular or plural) and the gender (masculine or feminine) of the noun it modifies. Thus, “stuffed chile” is “chile relleno” (singular masculine); “stuffed chiles” is “chiles rellenos” plural masculine; and “stuffed eggplant” is “berenjena rellena” (singular feminine). Remember that “ll” is pronounced as a “y,” so “relleno” is pronounced “re-ye-no,” with the accent on the second to last syllable.

Ingredients for Mexican Cooking

Many familiar ingredients are used in Mexican cooking, including rice, onions, garlic, tomatoes, monterey jack and cheddar cheese, beef, pork, and chicken. The following ingredients are less familiar to most American cooks:

Chiles

Chiles are an integral ingredient in Mexican cooking. Chiles are related to green (bell) pepper. A common misconception is that all chiles are hot (or all Mexican food is hot), but this is not the case. The flavor of many dishes is developed by lengthy simmering with a variety of chiles.

- Anaheim, or green chiles (chiles verdes) are large green chiles which are not very hot. These are sometimes called California chiles or New Mexico chiles. They are available fresh (see page 5 for preparation instructions) or canned.
- Hatch chiles are grown in the Hatch Valley of New Mexico. They have a smoky, spicy, and slightly sweet taste.
- Jalapeño chiles are small, green, very hot chiles.
- Poblano chiles are short, fat, and very dark green. They are excellent for Chiles Rellenos (Stuffed Chiles), but are somewhat difficult to find. Substitute Anaheim Chiles or Hatch Chiles.
- Ancho chiles are poblano chiles that have been dried. They are deep red, almost black, in color. They are three to five inches wide and about three inches long.
- Pasilla chiles are long, narrow, dried chiles with a deep red-black color. They are quite wrinkled and mild in flavor.
- Guajillo chiles are dark, brownish-red dried chiles with a tough, smooth, shiny skin.
- Mulato chiles are dried chiles similar in appearance to ancho chiles, but they are deeper brown in color.
- Chiles Negros are dried chiles similar in appearance to pasilla chiles, but they are dark black in color.
- Chiles de Árbol small, bright red dried chiles approximately two inches long. They are very hot.
- Chipotle chiles are mature (red) jalapeño chiles which have been smoked and barbequed. They are available in a can.
- Crushed red chile is hot red chile (such as Chiles de Árbol) which has been dried and crushed with the seeds.
- Ground red chile is mild red chile (such as Pasilla, California, or New Mexico) which has been dried and ground. Note that the chile powder sold in American markets is not the same as ground red chile; it is a blend of ground red chile and other spices (cumin, allspice, etc.).
- Chiles Pequin (or Piquín) are small red peppers 5 – 8 times hotter than Jalapeño chiles.

More Ingredients for Mexican Cooking

Herbs and Spices

- Cilantro (Fresh Coriander Leaves) is the herb which grows from coriander seed. Cilantro is sometimes called Chinese Parsley.
- Cumin seed (comino) is very common in Mexican cooking.
- Epazote is a fresh or dried herb. Can be difficult to find in American markets, but can usually be found in the produce aisle or spice section of most Mexican grocery stores. It can even be found on Amazon. Often used in beans.
- Saffron is used in a variety of Mexican dishes. Spanish Saffron is rather expensive, and is commonly found in the spice section of supermarkets. Mexican Saffron is less expensive, but it is necessary to use more because it is less concentrated (contains more of the flower) than Spanish Saffron.

Cheeses

Queso fresco (fresh cheese) is quite common in Mexican cooking, however, it is sometimes difficult to find. Substitute Farmer's cheese, if available, or a mixture of Monterey Jack and Cheddar. The following are two varieties of queso fresco:

- Enchilado cheese is a smooth, firm cheese with a spicy crust.
- Panela cheese is semisoft, moist, rubbery cheese with a mild flavor.
- Cotija cheese is an aged cheese made from cow's milk and named after the town of Cotija, Mexico.

Miscellaneous

- Masa Harina is a corn flour used to make corn tortillas, as well as other Mexican dishes.
- Pinto beans are tan, brown, and white spotted beans which are a regular part of the Mexican diet.
- Tomatillos are small green tomatoes with a thin husk and a tart, apple-like flavor. They are the basic ingredient in green sauces (salsa verde). They are available fresh (see page 5 for preparation instructions) or canned.
- Knorr's Swiss: chicken, beef, and tomato base flavoring (this is used all over Mexico). Comes in both powder form and bouillon cubes. One Bouillon Cube is equivalent to ½ TBSP chicken, beef, or tomato Base.
- Kraft Chicken Base can be used interchangeably with Knorr's Swiss Chicken Base or Cubes.
- Ibarra Chocolate is the most common brand of Mexican Chocolate. Substitute 3 oz sweet chocolate, 4 tsp ground cinnamon, a dash of almond extract, and a dash of vanilla extract for 3.3 oz Ibarra Chocolate.
- Piloncillo (Panocha) are hard cones of dark brown sugar. Substitute 2 TBSP dark brown sugar for one cone of piloncillo.
- Manteca (lard) is used in a number of recipes. Substitute bacon fat or vegetable shortening.

Preparing Green (Anaheim) Chiles

Anaheim chiles have a tough skin which should be removed before slicing, chopping, or stuffing the chiles. Heat  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{3}{4}$  inches of peanut oil in a skillet. Fry the chiles, one or two at a time, in the hot oil, gently splashing or pouring the hot oil over them and turning them frequently until the skins are blistered all around. Remove the chiles from the hot oil and plunge them into ice-cold water for at least 30 seconds. The chiles can then be peeled.

Substitute one 4 ounce can of chopped green chiles (or whole green chiles) for 6 fresh peeled green (Anaheim) chiles. (The canned chiles are already peeled.)

Preparing Fresh Tomatillos

Tomatillos are small green vegetables with a tough shell. They have a tart flavor, and are used to make green sauces (salsa verde).

|---|------|---------------------------|---|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 6 |      | fresh tomatillos, shelled | } | Boil until tender (approximately 10 minutes). Remove tomatillos from water and save the water. |
| 2 | cups | water                     |   |                                                                                                |
| 1 | tsp  | salt                      |   |                                                                                                |

Unless otherwise directed, the tomatillos are chopped in a blender together with half the water in which they are cooked. Save the remainder of the water and add it to the recipe later if more liquid is required.

Substitute one 4 ounce can tomatillos for 8 fresh tomatillos, shelled and boiled (blend canned tomatillos with liquid in can).

Chicken Broth and Boiled Chicken

Chicken broth and boiled chicken can be prepared according to the Chicken Enchilada recipe on page 17 (mild) or the Paella recipe on page 46 (rich). If you are in a hurry, you can prepare chicken broth using bouillon cubes.

Note that chicken broth is made using chicken meat, while chicken stock is made using chicken bones as well as meat, resulting in a thicker and more flavorful liquid. Broth and Stock can often be used interchangeably.

Preparing Dough and Thickening Sauces

The amount of flour, masa harina, or corn starch required when preparing dough or thickening sauces varies with both temperature and humidity. Therefore, you may find it necessary to adjust the quantities of these ingredients (or the quantity of liquid) to obtain the desired results.

Use of a Food Processor

When you chop onion, garlic, or jalapeño by hand, some of the juices and oils escape into the air and onto the cutting surface. When you chop these ingredients in a food processor, the juices and oils are retained and result in a stronger flavor. Thus, you will need to reduce the quantities specified in the recipe.

|----|------|----------------------------------------|---|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2  | cups | masa harina (or 1 ½ lbs prepared masa) | } | Combine.                                                                                                                                                                  |
| 1  | tsp  | salt                                   |   |                                                                                                                                                                           |
| 2  | TBSP | oil                                    |   | Combine with masa and mix well.                                                                                                                                           |
| ¼  | tsp  | baking powder                          | } | Add the water a little at a time to the masa and oil and mix until you can form a round ball. (You probably will not need all of the water.) Set aside for 15–20 minutes. |
| 1⅔ | cups | cold water                             |   |                                                                                                                                                                           |

Cut a piece of plastic wrap or plastic bag the size of a corn tortilla. Lay a ball of masa (1 ½ inch diameter) on the plastic and place in the tortilla press. Put plastic wrap on top and press.

Gently lay the masa on a heated griddle or cast iron frying pan greased with shortening. If the edges of the masa crack, it is too dry and more water must be added; too much water, however, will make it sticky. It takes two to three minutes for the tortilla to cook. When dough is slightly brown on one side, turn it over and brown the other side. Stack tortillas as they are cooked.

|---|------|--------------------------------------------------------------|---|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 8 | cups | flour                                                        | } | Mix.                                                                                      |
| ½ | tsp  | baking powder                                                |   |                                                                                           |
| 1 | TBSP | salt                                                         |   |                                                                                           |
| ¼ | cup  | melted shortening, lard, manteca, bacon grease, or olive oil | } | Mix until shortening or oil is evenly distributed in the dry ingredients.                 |
| 3 | cups | warm water                                                   | } | Add warm (not hot) water until dough is of a medium consistency and rolls easily by hand. |

Form small balls (about the size of golf balls); cover them with a towel to keep them moist while forming the tortillas.

Using a pelote or rolling pin, roll the balls into six-inch circles using the following technique: once forward, once backward, turn a quarter turn, and repeat until a circle is formed.

Lay tortillas on a heated griddle or cast iron frying pan (do not use grease!) and let them toast on medium-high heat until light brown patches appear on the bottom. Turn them over and let them toast until light brown patches appear on the other side. Remove from heat and stack in a pile covered with a towel.

Makes 24 to 36 tortillas.

Flour Tortillas with Olive Oil

An alternative recipe for flour tortillas appears on page 6.

|-----|------|----------------|---|-------------------------------------------------------|
| 2   | cups | white flour    | } | Mix.                                                  |
| 1   | tsp  | salt           |   |                                                       |
| ½   | tsp  | baking powder  |   |                                                       |
| 2 ½ | TBSP | olive oil      |   | Add to flour and mix with fingers until well blended. |
| ½   | cup  | lukewarm water |   | Slowly add water and mix until dough gets sticky.     |

Lay dough on a floured surface and roll so flour blends into dough. When a large soft ball forms, set aside and let rest for 10 minutes.

Pull off dough the size of a walnut, and roll into a ball. Using a rolling pin or pelote, roll ball into a flat circle. Cook on both sides on a griddle or frying pan until brown spots appear. Remove from heat and keep wrapped in foil or towel to keep warm.

Electric Tortilla Makers

Note that electric tortilla makers (such as the Chef Pro 10" Tortilla Flat Bread Maker FBM110) are available. These press, then cook the tortilla (either corn or flour) on the same device, so that a griddle or frying pan is not required. Flour tortillas are normally rolled rather than pressed, since the dough produced using the recipe above is too thick to press effectively. The flour tortilla recipes included with electric tortilla makers use more oil (typically ¼ cup rather than 2 ½ TBSP) and more water (typically ⅔ cup rather than ½ cup) with 2 cups of flour, to produce a thinner flour tortilla dough that can be pressed. The Chef Pro Tortilla Maker does not get as hot as a griddle or frying pan on the stove, so the tortillas take longer to cook. But it does produce good tortillas. So, if you're more interested in having a fancy toy than cooking authentic Mexican style tortillas, the Chef Pro Tortilla Maker might be just what you're looking for.

Frijoles (Beans)

Mexican Rice for Instant Pot

You can cook Mexican style rice in an Instant Pot. Note that you can use either long grain white rice, or long grain brown rice, but cooking brown rice requires more time, and brown rice will not be as fluffy as white rice.

| 1 quart   | chicken stock                          | } | Mix into the rice. Lock the cover on the Instant Pot.                                                                                                                                                             |
| 1 cup     | water ( for brown rice only )   |   | For white rice, do not add water. Press the Rice button (Low Pressure for 10 minutes).                                                                                                                     |
| 1 TBSP    | whole cumin seeds, crushed             |   | For brown rice, add 1 cup water. Press the Brown Rice button (High Pressure for 45 minutes).                                                                                                                      |
| 1/4 tsp   | ground black pepper                    |   | When the Rice cycle completes, Instant Pot will beep and switch to Warm. Quick Release the pressure, open the Instant Pot, and stir the rice.                                                                     |
| 1 tsp     | Knorr's Swiss chicken base (or 1 cube) |   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| 15 ounces | tomato sauce                           | } | Add to rice and stir. Leave on warm until moisture is absorbed or ready to serve. (Note that if the tomato sauce is pressure cooked with the rice in the Instant Pot, the bottom of the rice will probably burn.) |

Salsa Cruda (Uncooked Salsa)

You can make this recipe as hot or as mild as you like, depending upon the amount of jalapeño used. The taste for cilantro is an acquired one, so you may wish to begin with only a small amount (10 leaves), and increase the amount of cilantro as you acquire the taste for it.

Chilaquiles (Fried Tortilla Strips)

Chilaquiles is a simple and versatile dish and can be prepared in many different ways. Chilaquiles are made by cutting corn tortillas into strips to resemble noodles. They are then fried, with a sauce being added as they begin to get moist in the oil. Usually, the sauce is made of tomato, however, green tomatoes (tomatillo) can be used with green chiles and garlic to give a different flavor.

Chilaquiles de Huevo

We discovered a new way of making chilaquiles and would like to share this recipe with you. They are made with eggs instead of corn tortillas and with the dried shrimp that is found in local markets in the Mexican spice section.

These also make an excellent side dish for a main dish of meat because they do resemble fried noodles. The recipe given is a large quantity, but they can be frozen (freeze the sauce separately).

| ½ | cup    | peanut oil                             | } | Heat in a skillet. Pour in enough egg mixture to make a thin pancake. When egg is cooked but not hard, remove from pan and place on a paper towel to drain and cool. Repeat until all of the egg mixture is used. When egg pancakes are cool, stack them on top of each other and slice into strips like noodles. Place in a casserole dish and cover with the salsa. |

Sopes (Little Tazas or Cups)

The Mexican tradition of constructing edible tableware continues in this delightful recipe for Sopes (literally, little bowl). Made from corn flour and cooked, and then filled with a tangy combination of salsa, frijoles (beans) and queso (cheese), these little bowls will delight all who are fortunate enough to partake of them.

|     |      |                              |
|-----|------|------------------------------|
| 2   | cups | masa harina                  |
| 1/4 | cup  | manteca (lard or shortening) |
| 1/4 | cup  | ground red chile             |
| 1   | TBSP | salt                         |

} Mix together until well blended. Add 1 cup water, and mix together. If one cup does not form a semi-moist dough, add a little more water. Knead and work into a semi-moist state. Roll the dough into two-inch balls, place in the palm of your hand, and press down. If the edges crack, it is too dry, and you need to add a little more water.

Use a pelote or rolling pin to flatten to 1/4 inch thick. Very lightly fry both sides in a greased skillet over medium heat until they are warm but not hot, then remove from the skillet and pinch edges to 1/4 inch high all around to form a small cup. Return to the skillet and cook until lightly browned.

| 2   | cups | frijoles (beans)                                  |
| 1   | cup  | shredded Jack and cheddar cheese (mixed)          |
| 1   | cup  | salsa cruda (uncooked salsa)                      |
| 1/2 | head | lettuce, shredded                                 |
| 1/2 |      | onion, chopped                                    |
| 1/2 | cup  | sour cream                                        |
| 1   |      | Avocado, sliced                                   |
| 1/4 | cup  | sunflower seeds or piñones (pine nuts) (optional) |
| 1/4 | cup  | black olives, sliced                              |

} Into each sope, place a layer of 2 TBSP beans, then a pinch of salsa, then 2 TBSP Cheese, then 1 TBSP of salsa, then top with shredded lettuce, chopped onion, a dab of sour cream, and two avocado slices. Optionally top with sunflower seeds or piñones and sliced black olives.

Coches (Pork Taco with Tomatillo Sauce)

“Coche” is one way of saying “car” in Spanish. I learned this when I gave my Mexican help a ride home each night. I would tell them to open the door on the car, using the word “coche” for “car.” They would always giggle when I would say it, so one day I asked them why they were giggling. They said in Sinaloa, Mexico, where they were born and raised, there was a taco called a coche. Of course, I asked them how the taco was made. After a lengthy oral recipe, we decided to cook it to make sure we got it right. It turned out to be one of the tastiest dishes I’ve ever prepared. It’s quite a process, but well worth the effort.

Carne Guisada

Serving of meat and gravy is a custom shared by Mexicans and Americans, but the addition of exotic (to the Americano palate) spices and different methods of preparation change this “plain Jane” dish into a macho Carne Guisada.

The methods for preparation of Carne Guisada vary as much as the individuals cooking the dish. This recipe is Carmen Cabellero’s version. In it, the cinnamon and clove lend a unique flavor to the meat. The completed dish produces a mild taste, due largely to the fact that no chile is used.

Serve this dish with rice, beans and tortillas. This dish goes very well with Ensalada con Naranja y Cebolla and Empanada con Calabaza for dessert.

An alternative is to serve this dish with rice, salad, and French rolls with garlic butter.

Tamales

Tamales may be made of chicken or beef, but pork is the most common meat used among the Mexican people. In Southern California, though, the chicken and beef variations are predominant. The corn husks act as a natural preservative and will keep a meatless masa tamal for some time. Tamales stuffed with meat will spoil faster.

Tamales date back quite a ways in the Mexican cuisine. There is some dispute over whether the staple originated as an Indian or Mestizo (people of mixed Indian and European heritage) dish. Tamales are usually served with a fresh meat dish, just as Americans would use bread or potato side dishes.

In Cuba, those that can afford refrigeration use meat and those that can't rely on the highly seasoned masa wrapped in corn husks and then steamed. Most Mexicans prefer meat. A pork head is often used, because the meat is very rich and high in nutritive value. I usually use pork or boneless pork roast, chuck roast for beef tamales and stews for the chicken tamales.

Small versions of tamales double as hors d'oeuvres. Larger tamales stuffed with an olive are usually served for dinner.

A tortilla press comes in handy in order to press the masa for the corn husk. It is faster, but some people like to fill the leaf using a spatula. One package of corn husks will produce four to five dozen tamales. The Masa Harina by Quaker can be purchased at most local stores.

Red ground chile from New Mexico or California is the most flavorful we have found. Ground cumin, garlic, salt and black pepper are the only other ingredients needed.

At one time, the tamales were rolled round and then tied on each end with a thin strip of corn husk. Now, most of them are folded and steamed. The latter method is faster and easier to use and it does not alter the flavor at all.

Fruit and sweet tamales are two other variations. The tamales de fruta (fruit tamales) are excellent with breakfast. Tamales dulces (sweet tamales) made with caramel are usually served at "la cena" or the light evening meal.

To spread the dough on a husk with a spatula, begin with the husk flat. Spread the masa away from you at least four inches up the husk and across it. Be sure the husk is large enough to fold around the masa. For each tamal use three tablespoons masa. Then fill with one to two tablespoons meat. Fold the edges of the husk in to meet each other, wrapping the one over the other. Then fold the edges down. Add 1 olive if desired.

There are three possible ways to cook the tamales:

- Add about 1 inch of water to a roasting pan with a rack, and stack up to two dozen tamales on the rack above the water. Ensure that the tamales do not get wet. Place a cover on the roasting pan, and place the roasting pan over two burners on the stove. Heat over medium heat. Once the water begins to boil, allow to steam for about 30–45 minutes. When the tamales are thoroughly cooked, they should be firm.
- Add about ½ – 1 inch of water to a pressure cooker with a rack, and stack tamales on the rack above the water. Ensure that the tamales do not get wet. Pressure cook at 15 pounds of pressure for 10 minutes. Note that the tamales will cook more quickly in a pressure cooker, but the pressure cooker will not hold as many tamales.
- Add about ½ – 1 inch of water to an Instant Pot with a rack, and stack tamales on the rack above the water. Ensure that the tamales do not get wet. Pressure cook at high pounds of pressure for 10 minutes.

|       |        |                              | } | Spread 3 TBSP masa on each husk. (If masa is too dry, add water a little at a time.) Top with 2 TBSP meat. Add 1 olive to each tamale, then fold the tamales. Steam tamales as directed on page 34. While tamales are at their best when served hot and fresh, they also freeze very well when properly wrapped. They may be reheated in a microwave oven or steamed in a vegetable steamer until warm. |

| 1 |        | 5 pound rib-end pork roast (pork loin) | } | Rub the pork thoroughly with the juice mixture and let stand one hour. |

Place the pork in a heavy casserole. Cover the entire roast with the orange rinds, flesh side down. Cover with a lid and bake for two hours at 350°F.

Remove and save 3 TBSP of juices from the casserole. Turn the meat over and bake uncovered for another hour. Drain off and save the remaining juices.

Turn the oven up to 400°F and brown the bottom of the meat, then turn over and brown the other side. Remove the meat from the casserole. Add the juice and 2 cups water to the casserole and mix until the juices are well blended and have absorbed the browned juice from the casserole.

Slice the meat, and pour a little of the juice over each piece before serving.

Carnitas (Large Chunks of Cooked Pork)

Carnitas are usually made in a large iron pot set in a hole over hot rocks (a hole in the ground is filled with rocks, then a fire is set over the rocks to heat them up). Large chunks of fresh pork are used, after trimming off the fat (the fat is rendered into chicharrones, or pork rind). Garlic, onion, cumin, bay leaf, jalapeños, cinnamon sticks, cloves, and even a couple of cut-up chickens can be placed on top of the pork as it cooks. When the pork is done, it is removed, and the trimmed fat is placed into the pot to be rendered. (The rendered fat, or chicharrones, can be put inside a tortilla with salsa for a taco.)

Most people do not have the time or space to cook carnitas in a hole in the ground. This recipe is simpler, but just as tasty.

Scoop mixture onto center of tortillas and fold tortillas like an envelope over the mixture (first fold the left and right sides over the mixture, then fold the bottom up and the top down). Fasten closed by pinning with toothpicks from top to bottom, one on the right side and one on the left side. Return them to the skillet and fry until golden brown on both sides.

Serve with salsa, and top with sour cream and/or guacamole.

Spread 3 TBSP masa mix on each husk. Top with 2 TBSP chicken and fold the tamales. Steam tamales as directed on page 34. While tamales are at their best when served hot and fresh, they also freeze very well when properly wrapped. They may be reheated in a microwave oven or steamed in a vegetable steamer until warm.

Pollo a la Navarresa

During the 16th and 17th centuries, Spanish foods had a strong influence on the Mexican people. Many Mexicans realized the potential of these new spices and ingredients. They mixed and matched with the native foods and came up with new and interesting dishes.

Many Mexicans and Indians served as cooks for the wealthy Spaniards. The combinations born from such crosses of culture were astounding.

Though Spanish food is highly seasoned in its own right, it doesn't compare with the powerful Mexican punch. Quite a few Spanish dishes are bland. Like most European cooks, the Spanish were corrupted by the French.

Much of the Spanish cooking is done with olive oil rather than Manteca (lard) as is most Mexican food. Its basic seasoning comes from garlic, onion, and chili, similar to Mexican food, but other flavors are often used that seldom see the inside of a Mexican stomach. Bell peppers, paprika, and pimientos often turn up. Ham also appears as a frequent flavoring in the Spanish dish. The paprika should be Hungarian, or at least be stronger than the usual store bought brand. The inferior quality is called "arena," (sand) by the Spanish. Spanish dishes usually mix many ingredients in one dish. This recipe is from the province of Navarro.

Pescado en Naranja (Halibut in Oranges)

Seafood is very common in Mexico. In the coastal regions, fish is cooked with many different flavors or just plain. This is a wonderfully light and tasty dish, especially served with yellow rice. Although the small almost green orange is the best cooking orange, they are rarely found in the Northwest, so substitute navel oranges.

6 halibut filets
3 navel oranges
1 clove garlic, minced
½ tsp oregano
½ tsp black pepper

} Lay the fish in a baking dish. Cut the oranges in half and squeeze the juice over the fish. Sprinkle the garlic, oregano, and pepper over the fish, then lay the orange skins over the fish, fleshy side down. Cover with foil and bake for approximately 15 to 20 minutes at 350°F until the fish will flake.

Camarones Fritos (Fried Shrimp)

½ clove garlic, minced
¼ jalapeño, minced
¼ cup peanut oil

} Sauté.

12 prawns in the shell
¼ tsp black pepper
¼ tsp cumin

} Add to skillet and fry until the shrimp turns pink (3 to 5 minutes). Remove and serve in shell with rice.

Chiles Verdes Rellenos con Pescado (Green Chiles Stuffed with Fish)

1 tomato, chopped fine
¼ onion, chopped fine
¼ clove garlic, minced
⅛ jalapeño, minced
1 pound tuna in water
½ tsp salt (or to taste)
¼ tsp black pepper (or to taste)

} Combine and mix well.

6 Anaheim chiles
peanut oil

} Fry in ¼ inch peanut oil until a white crust appears, turning while frying. Be careful of splattering hot oil. Then, drop the chiles into ice water and allow to cool. Peel off and discard the white crust. Cut a small slit in each chile. Remove the seeds. Stuff with tuna.

lettuce, spread on platter

Lay the stuffed chiles on the lettuce.

½ cup grated cheese (Jack, farmer's, or mild cheddar)

} Sprinkle on the stuffed chiles.

Ceviche de Camarón (Marinated Shrimp)

Ceviche is often made using uncooked seafood. Marinating the seafood for four hours or longer in lemon or lime juice produces an effect similar to cooking, but there is still a risk of illness if the seafood is not properly prepared. This recipe uses cooked shrimp, and therefore does not require lengthy marination.

| 12 | balls | masa dough, prepared according to corn tortilla recipe (page 6) | } | Press each ball to form a raw tortilla.                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| 1  | pound | chihuahua or Jack cheese, grated                                |   | Spread cheese over ½ of each raw tortilla.                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| 12 | jumbo | prawns or shrimp, cooked                                        | } | Lay a prawn in the center of the cheese on each tortilla, with the tail extending out over the edge of the tortilla. Fold the tortilla over the cheese and prawn, and toast fry in hot oil until golden brown. Place in rows on each side of the row of tomatoes. |
|    |       |                                                                 |   | Serve with salsa cruda (uncooked salsa). To eat, pinch off the tail of the shrimp, and place some cabbage and tomato inside. Serve with Saffron Rice with Bananas.                                                                                                |

|-----|--------|------------------------------------------------------|---|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 1   | head   | cauliflower                                          | } | Steam until barely tender. Gently break off buds and set aside.                                  |
| 6   |        | egg                                                  |   | Beat the eggs until as stiff as possible.                                                        |
| 1   | tsp    | baking powder                                        | } | Add to eggs. Beat for 30 seconds more.                                                           |
| 1   | tsp    | salt                                                 |   |                                                                                                  |
| 2   | TBSP   | flour                                                | } | Add to eggs. Beat for 30 seconds, no more!, until just mixed.                                    |
| 1   | cup    | peanut oil                                           | } | Dip cauliflower into egg mixture and toast fry in oil until golden brown. Drain on paper towels. |
| 1/2 |        | onion, chopped                                       | } | Fry for 3 minutes on medium heat.                                                                |

| 2   |        | tomatoes, chopped                                    |   | Add to skillet, fry 5 minutes more.                                                              |
| 1   | tsp    | ground cumin                                         | } | Add to skillet. Let simmer for 10 minutes.                                                       |
| 3   |        | green chiles, chopped, or 1 can chopped green chiles |   |                                                                                                  |
| 1/2 | tsp    | black pepper                                         |   |                                                                                                  |
| 1   | cup    | hot water                                            | } | Add to skillet, stir well, and simmer until everything is combined. Pour over cauliflower.       |
| 2   |        | Knorr's Swiss chicken bouillon cubes                 |   |                                                                                                  |
| 1/2 | cup    | grated cheddar cheese                                | } | Sprinkle over cauliflower. Bake at 350°F for 10 minutes, and serve.                              |

Zucchini may be used instead of cauliflower, except that the zucchini is cut into 2 inch wide slices, and zucchini fries more quickly than cauliflower. Use small tender zucchini.

Fruit Salad ala Mexicana

Every Latin American food variety, and especially Mexican, features a year-round abundance of fruit. In the markets of most Latin American countries, there appears an endless selection of colors, sizes, shapes, and flavors.

Though some fruit can be transported only a short way, pineapples, bananas, and coconuts are exported to the United States with no problems.

Even the poorest people in Mexico look upon fruit as a necessary part of their meals. Peasants' huts are apt to be surrounded by banana plants and papaya trees. The leaf of the banana plant is used to wrap foods before cooking them, and to cover barbeque pits while cooking meat. The fruit is cooked or eaten raw, depending upon the peasant's mood.

Papayas range in flavor from extremely sweet to tart. They are excellent for the digestive tract, and are handy for tenderizing meats.

Pineapples were cultivated by pre-Columbus Indians in the Carribean regions. A good Mexican pineapple is sweet. However, the ones we get are sent to us green and it is hard to find them at their peak. When you buy one, pluck some of the stem out of the top; if it comes out easily, then it is ripe.

Most of the tropical fruits will blend together well. Coconut adds a sweet nutty flavor and helps the flavors of the other fruits to blend.

Break the dough into two loaves. Knead each loaf, coating with flour if necessary to reduce stickiness. Shape the dough into a rectangle approximately  $\frac{3}{4}$  inches thick. Spread the nut paste as shown. Cut one end into three strips as shown. Roll the dough almost to the slits, allowing the roll to extend in the indicated directions. Form the three strips into a braid. Then, fold the braid to the left over the top of the loaf. Place each loaf in a lightly greased 9 x 13 baking pan. Allow the loaves to rise a second time to double their size. Brush beaten egg over each loaf, then bake at 350°F until golden brown (approximately 25 minutes); the loaves should sound hollow when tapped. Serve with butter.
